SUNDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 19, 1905.

Phoebe's Change of Front

HE worm will turn, and so will Phoebe Cousins—indeed, Phoebe has already turned. For more than a quarter of a century she was one of the ablest and best known advocates of woman suffrage in the United States, having stood next to Susan B. Anthony as a champion of the full equality of women before the law. But about two years ago Phoebe moved over from her Missouri home into prohibition Kansas, and there retired into herself and in "maiden meditation, fancy free," she devoted herself to a deep and profound study of all phases of the cause to which she had thus far devoted her life. As a result of this serious and prolonged introspection she now emerges from her retirement a full fledged opponent of the cause in favor of which she has spoken from every rostrum in the country. "Struggle against it as I may," she says, "I cannot escape the conviction that the women of the United States are not yet fit to exercise the right of suffrage." The chief cause of Phoebe's relapse seems to be what she calls the "foolish action" of the Woman's Christian Temperance union, and referring to this organization she says, in a letter printed in the New York Herald, under a big picture of herself:

"I cannot subscribe to the doctrines of the Woman's Christian Temperance union, its leaders are narrow in their views. In fact, they are ridiculous. They are so ridiculous that they have convinced me that the day has not come for woman suffrage. Why, if the Woman's Christian Temperance union was in control of the government these women would put God in the constitution! They would enact laws that would make it impossible to live with any degree of comfort. Personal liberty would be abridged until there would be no real enjoyment in life. The evils of intemperance can best be minimized by the regulation of the liquor traffic, which can never be wholly suppressed as long as the people have an appetite for it. My experience in prohibition Kansas convinces me that laws against the licensed sale of liquors are failures. Last year four boys were expelled from the public schools of Wilson, the little town in which I lived, for drunkenness. There were 'joints' everywhere. As I passed through Topeka I was informed that there were 164 'joints' in operation. Liquor will be sold in spite of prohibition laws, and the state loses the revenues derived from the license."

What Miss Cousins says of the failure of prohibition has been so thoroughly demonstrated that no practical person can doubt it. And the failure of the anti-liquor law has been even more clearly demonstrated. The passage of these measures was secured by good, well-meaning people, but the result has not been what the people responsible for them intended to accomplish. They were intended to reduce the quantity of strong drink consumed in the country. They have considerably aggravated the evil they were intended to abate. There is more liquor sold and drunk per capita in those states in which the traffic is prohibited by law than in those in which it is controlled by practical business regulations. Now, the aim and effort of all good people should be to do all the good they can; even if they cannot do all they would like to do. And right there is where so many people make a fatal mistake in dealing with the evil of intemperance. They will not co-operate with those who desire to take practical measures for mitigating the evil, and refuse to do anything unless they can abolish it altogether—which is impossible, and will always be impossible, as long as human nature remains as it is. But how does Miss Cousins hope to show that the passage of "cranky" laws on the liquor subject, or any other subject, is an argument against woman suffrage? The women did not vote on the prohibition law in those states which have the law, and they did not vote in congress on the act abolishing the covenant. We are not an advocate of woman suffrage, but we are a radical advocate of the square deal, and we cannot see how it is giving the women of the country a square deal to hold them responsible for laws which they had no voice in making. According to the reasoning of Miss Cousins we are to hold the women, and especially the Women's Christian Temperance union responsible for these facts because they had influence enough over the fathers, husbands and brothers, to make the men vote for them. But hold on, Phoebe, that's proving too much. That argument carried out to its logical conclusion, would disfranchise the men, and put the ballot in the hands of the women exclusively, as the stronger sex—and that will never do.

But during her retirement Miss Phoebe took a second counter-irritant in the form of the old Sunday closing law of Missouri, and this seems to have had a greater effect on the woman's suffrage virus in her system than even the Woman's Christian Temperance union, and because Governor Folk has revived this obsolete statute and is enforcing it, she has gone back to St. Louis and organized a woman's crusade for the repeal of the law. Upon this point she says:

"I have come to St. Louis, despite my infirmities, to direct the women of St. Louis in their fight to defeat the operation of this oppressive law. It has been a dead letter for years and was enacted more than three-quarters of a century ago. Custom has established the open Sunday saloon and it has become an almost indispensable convenience. The enforcement of the statute works a hardship upon thousands of law-abiding citizens who are just as honest and just as intelligent as the good governor who has decreed that they shall not have their Sunday beverages served in their gardens or over the bar of the saloon. The enforcement of the law is unjust to the very large German-American population of St. Louis. These frugal people are devoted to their beer gardens, and it is little short of an outrage for a hypercritical clique of reformers to deprive them of their liquid refreshments on the one day that they could most enjoy them."

Miss Cousins' letter to the Herald contains a great deal more in the same vein, but we have copied enough to show that Phoebe is in "dead earnest" in her opposition to the Sunday closing law. The papers say that over three thousand respectable women have already signed her petition, and it will be no matter of surprise if Governor Folk soon finds himself "up against" the hardest proposition he has ever met.

We would cheerfully pay the price of a first class seat to be within hearing distance of Susan B. Anthony when she reviews Miss Phoebe and her new departure.

A CORRESPONDENT puts this power up to us: "I have read your article about sending Rodey to Washington. It is a good idea, and I favor it, but after the people of New Mexico had elected the Pennsylvania bovine with such a grand hurrah, only a year ago, wouldn't it be a little humiliating to them to have to send another man to Washington to try to neutralize the harm which the presence of the bull will probably do the territory?" We answer frankly, yes, it would. But on the other hand "an honest confession is good for the soul."

It is now reported, apparently upon good authority, that a high official at Washington is going to secure the appointment of a good young man to the governorship of New Mexico, and then have his daughter marry the governor! Hymen's altar, with all the fixin's, set right up in the Executive Mansion! Gee! Won't that be nice! Wonder if Jose Antonio, Jesus Maria and the rest of us will get invitations.

It is rumored that a considerable amount of the dishonored Andrew "Baker" is held in New Mexico.

Whether or not Russia is a limited monarchy there is no doubt that Nicholas is a very limited monarch.

The Las Vegas Pedagogue has been either the Almanac or the Citizen. It has discovered the tomb of Charlemagne.

The Almanac is now busy proving to the dear public that the Weekly New Mexican Review has a circulation, Aw g'wan.

Wanted—Expert stenographers to handle our correspondence with M. White. Apply early and avoid the rush. The Daily Citizen.

Coal Oil Johnny Rockefeller must be going to start another Sunday school as the price of oil has been advanced half a cent again.

Mr. Parker said that it might be dangerous to open those ballot boxes. From Mr. McClellan's point of view it does look rather dangerous.

R. F. Hayes, the New York embezzler, says Blaine is worse than Hell. Mr. Hayes does not state the length of his residence in the latter named place.

Governor Herrick blames "prejudice" for his defeat in the recent election. For that matter it was probably prejudice that defeated Judge Parker and Billy Bryan.

Witte's offer has evidently been accepted. "The Squeak" publishes a startling apasm from its "special correspondent" in St. Petersburg. And wouldn't that jar you?

There is said to be an alarming shortage in the baked bean crop in Boston. Perhaps that explains the dyspeptic pettishness of the Transcript in regard to the statehood question.

It has been demonstrated that loud-annum has no effect on a government printer. Henry M. Allen, of Philadelphia, tried to shuffle off by the poison route, but he couldn't face himself.

The Las Vegas Pedagogue says the Morning Journal is showing signs of an early collapse. The Journal is still three behind the Optic, for the latter is now just passing into its fourth childhood.

The Citizen says the reason it only issues six papers is because its employees need a rest. Another disappointment. Some people really believed that the Citizen had philanthropic motives in the matter.

The Evening Prehistorical Digest has observed silence on the subject of new lately and follows out its policy of printing everything ten days after the Morning Journal, which is still making a humble effort to cultivate its "vastly inferior" field.

The Blaine Review observes that the New Mexico press has not yet been thoroughly convinced of the fact that fully 95 per cent of the people of Arizona are against joint statehood. The Review statehood editor is a gentleman of great penetration.

The Squeak has at last found out about the Arizona joint statehood league and comes bravely up on Saturday night with a word-for-word special to the Journal of several days before—without credit. Meanwhile the Morning Journal is plodding along in its "inferior" field.

The Squeak is nothing if not enterprising. Besides its vast horde of special correspondents, scattered so thickly over Europe, Asia and Africa that you couldn't move without stepping on one, the Squeak has now sent a polar expedition into the far north, an already existing to the interior of Tibet, and has King Edward fairly bursting a blood vessel to get in his account of the political situation in England. Kaiser Wilhelm has just been sent to a hospital to recover from the awful nervous strain of writing the Citizen a letter telling the true inwardness of his relations with the czar. The Citizen is now organizing also an expedition to find the body of Tom Grinnell and will send a relief expedition to China to avenge the slaughter of missionaries, first pausing to rescue the Jews of Russia from the jaws of the mob. Meanwhile the horde of correspondents never stop writing. Wow!

WORK A RHEUMATISM CURE.
 Homely Treatment Described by a Physician at Sanitarium.

Suffering from rheumatism though she thought it sounded more aristocratic to call it rheumatic gout, a fashionable woman in the city spent part of her summer in a western sanitarium, and she has returned cured. Her friends thought it strange she kept silent about the method of her rejuvenation and they pressed her with questions until she reluctantly told the story. This is the outline, though not in her words. The physician told her she needed plenty of exercise, especially of the arms, and that he did not believe in dumb-bells. "Just sweep your bed-room thoroughly every morning," said he. "Sweep it until not a speck of dust flies from the carpet. Then strip your bed, take a short cane, get angry with that mattress and sweep it until you can't get another bit of dust from that. Then take a dust cloth and clean the entire room." The patient raised her gold-rimmed forefinger and looked at this brave physician for full moment. Then she said laughingly she had come to be treated for rheumatism, not to take a chambermaid's position. "I am treating you for rheumatism," he replied, "and if you don't like that prescription you can take a change." She thought it over and the next morning she began her routine. Now, she is recommending the cure to all her friends.

No Poison in Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

From Napier, New Zealand, Herald: Two years ago the Pharmacy Board of New South Wales, Australia, had an analysis made of all the cough medicines that were sold in that market. Out of the entire list they found only one that they declared was entirely free from all poisons. This was Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, made by the Chamberlain Medicine Company, Des Moines, Iowa, U. S. A. The absence of all narcotics makes this remedy the safest and best that can be had; and it is with a feeling of security that any mother can give it to her little ones. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is especially recommended by its makers for coughs, colds, croup and whooping cough. When taken in time it prevents pneumonia. This remedy is for sale by all druggists.
